City's troubled River Rescue fleet taps Captain Quint

Pittsburgh's troubled River Rescue fleet has turned to veteran helmsman Captain Quint to take command of its unit.

The crusty old salt got the job after screeching his fingernails on a blackboard during a city council meeting, causing some council members to think that former Mayor Masloff was speaking.

Captain Quint agreed to assume command of the fleet on condition that all the River Rescue vessels be scrapped in favor of his seasoned boat, The Orca, and that the entire crew be fired. "There are too many captains on this island," he explained.

Captain Quint scoffed at suggestions that he is going to need a bigger boat, and insisted that his vessel can handle any size shark that might surface on the Ohio River.

WINNIE THE POOH KILLED BY POACHER

HUNDRED ACRE WOOD — Winnie the Pooh, willy-nilly-silly old bear, was killed by a poacher yesterday when he emerged from his home. His carcass, riddled with bullets, was discovered this morning by Tigger. "I pounced on him like I always do, a hoo hoo hoo hoo! But he didn't move, a hoo hoo hoo hoo! And now I know why!" Tigger sobbed, before adding "boo hoo hoo hoo hoo!"

Authorities suspect Pooh was led to his doom by the scent from a honey pot strategically placed under his window. Pooh has battled an addiction to honey for years.

"Everybody knows Pooh was always on the make for honey," said an animal friend identified as Piglet. "He was in an out of rehab many times, trying to get clean. It was a monkey on his back he just couldn't shake."

Supreme Court Justices to get 'intro' music

Inspired by major league baseball players' "at-bat music," starting in October, the nine justices of the U.S. Supreme Court will select their favorite introductory songs to be played as they enter the courtroom.

Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg has selected the theme from "Rocky"; Justice David Souter has picked "But You Don't Know Me"; and Justice Antonin Scalia says he wants "Pop Goes the Weasel."

Hear da JUDGE

By the Hon. Rufus Peckham
Editor of Carbolic Smoke Ball

Dear Judge: My husband keeps blaming himself because my brother was involved in a serious car accident while running an errand for him. How can I help my husband find peace of mind?

— Carol, Pleasant Hills

Dear Carol: I'm lost here. Why would you want him to "find peace of mind"? It sounds as if you finally have the perfect thing to throw in his face. I'm not suggesting you do this on a regular basis — only when it's necessary.

Dear Judge: The young woman next door has taken to nude sunbathing. When I'm upstairs in my house, even though she's pretty far away, I can actually catch a glimpse of her over the fence. Help!

— Bob, Brentwood

Dear Bob: I assume you're asking for help on the "pretty far away" aspect. Check out the Sunday paper — several stores are running fantastic sales on binoculars.

To Santino ("Sonny"), Long Island: Next time, take the causeway — the toll takers are the nicest people in the world.
